

THE CALL COMES TO EVERYONE.

I had lost sight of Jason for just a few moments, but when I spotted him again, he was praying for a man in the park. It was our last full day in London during our quick trip in December, so we'd headed to Buckingham Palace. Davy scampered ahead of us as we walked through St. James' Park, careful not to get too close to the snapping swans. Jason and our friend Gareth lagged further behind and I eventually noticed them praying. It came as no surprise to me that Jason would find himself in such a position in the midst of sightseeing! Over the next hour, Jason and Gareth prayed for the man and told him about Jesus' love for him before shaking hands and parting ways.

The call to all Christians to "go and make disciples" often detours our outings or evenings in such a way — as it should! And while the methods we use to proclaim the Gospel may vary, the calling on every believer is the same. Our specific passion for street evangelism, discipleship, and equipping young leaders has prompted us to respond to the deep need in the world by joining an organization called Kerygma180, based in London, England. We have committed to work with them for 3 years beginning this June. As we have prayed for the past 6 months about joining K180, God has made it clear that our partnership with them will leverage our strengths and passions to greater effect.

The specific challenges facing Europe are daunting. The most recent census taken by the British government shows that the number of Christians in the UK is decreasing rapidly; in 10 years dropping from almost 75% to just over 50% of the population. At the same time, our friends with K180 have told us that there are more churches wanting to be taught leadership and evangelism than they have people to send. One in three adults in the UK don't know a Christian, and yet each Friday night when the K180 crew goes out and evangelizes on the streets of London, these very people are responsive, inquisitive, and open. The harvest is plentiful, they have said. The workers are few.
